

The image of the kneeling slave with inscription “Am I not a Woman and a Sister?” was used by women in the Anti-Slavery Movement.

Seneca Observer, October 4th, 1843.

The Liberty Bell image was adopted by abolitionists and became a universally recognized emblem of the Anti-Slavery Movement.

An Anti-Slavery Fair

Anti-Slavery Fairs were held throughout the 1840s and 1850s to raise money and bring attention to the Anti-Slavery movement. Organized primarily by women abolitionists, anti-slavery fairs featured crafts and refreshments for sale. Elizabeth M’Clintock raised $300.00 at an anti-slavery fair and donated the sum to the Western New York Anti-Slavery Society in Rochester.

At the Fair

Sugar Free Sweets: Friends of Women’s Rights National Park, Inc. Finger Lakes Chapter. Seneca Falls, New York.

Chair Caning and Rush Demonstration: Henry and Valerie Brown. Henry’s Furniture Repair. Junius, New York.

On the Stage

Paul Kuhn is the owner of Guided Walking Tours of Cooperstown, a tourist service focusing on both history and architecture. He is also a historical interpreter at the Farmers’ Museum. For the past four years, he has specialized in conducting authentic phrenology demonstrations. He serves as chairman of Cooperstown’s planning board.

Lynne McKenney Lydick is an actress and historical impersonator. Her portrayal of Abby Kelley Foster evinces the latter’s conviction that “all people are created equal and deserve to be free.” Her program - “Yours for Humanity - Abby” - is under the auspices of the Worcester Women’s History Project.

David Shakes is an actor and director as well as a social worker in the Rochester City School District. He has been a historical impersonator around western New York for more than 20 years. His ongoing research on Frederick Douglass and other reformers has created a keen appreciation of the vigorous pursuit of equality for all people.

Eleanor Stearns is an historical actress who has researched and written portrayals of Clara Barton, Emily Dickinson, Amelia Earhart, and Elizabeth Cady Stanton. She presents her Women of Vision programs throughout New York. She is a member and former president of the Geneva Theatre Guild.
